An Illustration of the Cause of Many Fatal Diseases

Note the heads of the seventh and eighth ribs lifted from their sockets and pinching the nerves above them. These two nerves are the principal nerves in control of the abdominal organs, stomach, intestines, liver, pancreas and spleen. How many troubles in these organs date from a strain in a lift or fall, probably slight at first, but as tissues tighten and the pinching of the nerves increases, the troubles are aggravated until a serious and often fatal disease results?

How many cases of so-called gall stones have gone to the knife and death when the case was one of neuralgia from these pinchings of nerves?

MRS COE WITNESS IN DOMESTIC SUIT

AVERTS GAZE FROM SONS AS SHE TAKES STAND FOR CROSS EXAMINATION.

Family strife is Subject Upon Which Testimony is Made—Photograph of Farmhouse Where Couple Was Married Is Flashed in Court—Mrs. Coe is Composed Under Fire.

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 11.—More of the domestic infelicities of Dr. Henry Waldo Coe and his wife, Viola M. Coe, and the dispute as to whether the doctor and his wife had agreed to a settlement of their property rights directly following his return from the Orient in October, 1910, were reviewed in the third day of the trial before Judge McGinn yesterday.

So far all the testimony has had to do with the property issue. Yesterday the direct examination of Mrs. Coe ended.

In the morning session of the court after one of numerous spats between himself and Attorney Clark that enlivened the case, Mr. Joseph turned to Judge McGinn and asked him not to permit himself to be drawn from the main issue by immaterial matters involved in the controversies of counsel.

From shortly after 2:30 o'clock until just before 6, Mrs. Coe underwent cross-examination from Mr. Clark.

At no time, however, did the witness lose her composure, though once or twice she appeared slightly ruffled.

While on the stand, Mrs. Coe sat facing the court, with the side of her face toward Attorney Clark. Dr. Coe and their three sons, who were with the doctor. She carefully averted her gaze from any member of her family, but often looked unwinkingly at Mr. Clark as he questioned her.

Once, after having her identify a book of photographs of this $30,000 home, the building of which, at Mrs. Coe's vehement urging, so the defense alleges, left Dr. Coe financially much straitened. Mr. Clark pointed to another photograph on one of the front pages.

"I see here a picture of a little house," he said. "Can you tell me what it is?"

"Why, that's the farmhouse," said Mrs. Coe, apparently surprised.

"Yes," said Mr. Clark, "the little farmhouse in South Dakota, where you were married."

Of events leading to the trip to the Orient taken in 1910 by Dr. Coe for his health, during which, it is alleged by the defense, Mrs. Coe obtained control of the doctor's sanitarium property, Mrs. Coe's memory was not at all times good. Mr. Clark was especially insistent for details regarding stories which had gained circulation that Dr. Coe was insane, a sufferer from paranoia.

Mrs. Coe's explanation was in part that she had been so worried about her husband's nervous condition that she went to a specialist in Seattle, and without giving her husband's name, outlined his symptoms. The specialist, she said, told her the indication pointed to a serious condition, probably paranoia.

Then, the witness said, she told Dr. Mae Cardwell what the Seattle specialist had said, told her Dr. Coe's symptoms, naming her husband, and asked Dr. Cardwell to present the case to Drs. Williamson, House and Gillespie, among others, without giving any name, for their opinions. She said they all said that symptoms of paranoia were indicated.

She didn't remember the name of the Seattle specialist, the name of his institution, or its location, on cross examination.

"BOIL IT DOWN" JUDGE ADVISES ATTORNEYS

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 11.—"The business of the court should move with precision and dispatch. Hannigan's advice to Hannigan should be hung in front of the bench of every circuit in the state. That advice was 'Boil it down.' I believe that the courts should be conducted with as little expense to the taxpayers as possible and that the judge should prevent delays."

Circuit Judge Campbell of Oregon City, who is filling the bench of Department No. 6 during the absence of Circuit Judge Cleaton at Hillsboro, has maintained a business-like air of hustle in the courtroom since he began the trial of cases. The attorneys are admonished to waste no time in repetition of questions during examinations and witnesses are promptly excused when their testimony has been finished.

Low Rate on Coal Wanted.

DENVER, Dec. 11.—The fight of northern Colorado shippers for a lower rate on coal shipments from the northern Colorado coal fields to Greeley reached a crisis today when the petition of the Greeley commercial club for a reduction in the rate came up before the state railroad commission. The petition is directed against the Union Pacific and Colorado & Southern railroads. Although the distance is only a few miles, the present rate is $1.10 on ordinary lump coal. The petitioners want it cut in half.
